A: The activation key is unique to the system (computer) you're installing it on, and this is an easy way to check. If you look in the settings menu, the activation code should be listed under "Product Activation". If you're installing it in a virtual machine, you'll need to transfer the files to the physical machine you plan to install on as well as the activation code. The activation code is simply the serial number of the software you've installed. It will need to be written down by the seller. At the top of the packaging, you should see "Product Activation", it should be the code you need. A: To quote the great Jayjay from The Sims Wiki, this is the error you get if the Microsoft Activation Server is down. It is a common myth that you need the registration or serial key (the latter is not true, in fact) to activate the product. As long as you receive an "installation-complete" email, you can install the product. What happens on my end is that I get the same error message, until I click on Finish the installation, then the game finishes. From the NTSC manual: The Software activation process has failed or timed out. The product is not activated. The Operating system is the Windows Vista SP1. A: I've just tried re-activating one of my ex-PMDG airplanes (Lockheed 07, VC-11, MD520) in Firefox and while the installer worked fine, there was no surprise when the activation check was done. In the case I'm after I received the registration/serial number already, so I'm quite confident that the PMDG activation software is working fine. [Pulmonary vascular resistance in heart failure].
